

The new rule which effectively bans an Airline Captain from taking his wife with him on the flight deck is utterly ludicrous. It has no basis in improving security and could be argued as being a detriment to flight deck security on a two-crew operation. It is an ill-conceived, draconian and non-sensical measure which infringes freedom of movement for no gain. I would ask that this rule be adapted, as soon as possible, to allow an Airline Captain the discretion to choose who is allowed to sit in the flight deck.
